While many of Fabian's paintings are concerned with emotions such as passion and desire, camaraderie is also a recurring theme. This bond of friendship, often between men, is both symbolised and celebrated in this magnificent still life.

These mesmerizing pure bronze sculptures breath life into two key figures from Fabian's personal story; the much painted 'Man in Black Suit' who represents the artist's charismatic father, and the universal woman who stands for passion and desire, yet radiates warmth and humanity.

The warmth and humanity of Fabian's female subjects is as central to his images as their beauty and seductiveness. Like Toulouse Lautrec, whose vibrant but humorous portrayals of the Moulin Rouge cancan dancers offered us a uniquely intimate view of these extraordinary women, it is Fabian's closeness to the reality of his subjects that sets him apart from other artists who might paint such figures from a greater distance.
